

Dr Haoci 'Alex' Liu, MSc, MD, PhD, completed his degree of medical doctor, majoring in general surgery at Shanghai Jiao Tong University. He was trained as a surgical resident specialising in hepato-pancreato-biliary surgery.

Alex has always dedicated himself to health science ever since he graduated from University. He completed his PhD with the University of Western Australia investigating the potential blood pressure lowering-effect from consuming nitrate-rich green leafy vegetables. His clinical research generated a number of publications. His work was also showcased in The West Australian.

Alex recently joined the Dobney Hypertension Centre to pursue his passion of medicine and clinical research. His knowledge in hypertension and his medical experience will surely be an asset to the centre more importantly, the patients.

In his own time, Alex likes exploring different cultures, including languages and cuisines. He also has a passion for history.